A NEW POEM BY WHITTIER.

The New York Independent contained the following poem by J. G. Whittier:

A drear and desolate shore,
Where no tree unfolds its leaves,
And never the spring wind waves
Green grass for the hunter's tread;
A land forsaken and dead,
Where the ghostly icebergs go
And come with the ebb and flow
Of the waters of Bradore.

A wanderer from a land
By summer breezes fanned,
Looked around him, awed, subdued
By the dreadful solitude,
Hearing alone the cry
Of seabirds clanging by,
The crash and grind of the floe,
Wall of wind and wash of tide,
"Oh, wretched land," he cried,
"Land of all lands the worst,
God forsaken and cursed,
Thy gates of rocks should show
The words of the Tuscan Seer
Read in the realm of woe
'Hope entereth not here.'"
Lo! At his feet there stood
A block of smooth larch wood,
Beside a rock-closed cave,
By nature fashioned for grave,
Sate from the ravening bear
And fierce fowl of the air.
Wherein to rest was laid
A twenty summers' maid,
Whose blood had equal share
Of the lands of vines and snow,
Half French, half Eskimo.

In letters, uneffaced,
Upon the block were traced
The grief and hope of man,
And thus the legend ran:
"We loved—
Words can not tell how well
We loved her,
God loved her,
And called her home to peace and rest,
We love her."

The stranger paused and read,
"O, Winter Land," he said,
"Thy right to be I own,
God loves thee not alone.
And if the fierce winds blow
Over thy waste of rock and snow
And at thy iron gates
Thy ghostly iceberg waits,
Thy homes and hearts are dear,
God's love and man's are here."

Thy sorrow o'er the sacred dust
Is sanctified by hope and trust.
"Still, where's her'er it goes,
Love makes its atmosphere;
Its flowers of Paradise
Take root in the eternal ice,
And bloom through polar snows."

A NEW MORMON TEMPLE.

The Imposing Structure Being Erected in the Wilderness.

Picche Record.

The construction of the Grand Temple of Worship now being erected by the Mormon church at Manti, Utah, is being pushed ahead with as large a force of workmen as convenience will permit, and the walls of the building are beginning to loom up and are covered with scaffolding and derricks. We learn from Mr. D. Wilken, who has just returned from a trip out in the Manti country, that the temple is being constructed out of white limestone. The building is situated on the top of a mountain, a spur of Wasatch range, that extends out into the town of Manti, and is called by the people of Utah the Mountain of the Lord.

The foundation of the temple is sixty-three feet above the level of the road, and is set in solid rock; the top of the mountain having been excavated and removed, making it level, is ninety-five feet in width and one hundred and seventy-two in length. From the ground to the square will be eighty-two feet in height. There will be two towers erected, one at the east end and the other at the west corner of the building. The tower at the east corner will be one hundred and seventy-nine feet in height, while that of the west corner will be ten feet lower, or one hundred and sixty-nine feet in height. They are thirty feet square at the base. There are four terrace walls around the mountain in front of the temple, which will average about seventeen feet in height and are about nine hundred feet in length, and in all contain two thousand four hundred cords of rock as at present built, and fifty-five thousand yards of debris has been excavated and hauled away. The stairway from the road to the upper terrace is sixty-three feet, and will contain one hundred and thirty-two stone steps, sixteen feet in width.

The back of the terrace will be filled with rich soil to the top of the stone work and trees and shrubbery planted, and the tops of the terraces are to be ornamented by neatly dressed and cut stone, and statues will be placed at various and appropriate places. The water to supply the temple will be brought in wooden pipes from a spring situated about a mile and a quarter east of the temple back in the mountains, and has a fall of seventy-nine feet from the reservoir, and one hundred feet from the reservoir to the lower terrace. The whole side of the mountain is to be planted with trees and flowers, and the crystal stream poured forth by the little spring, as it winds its way down the side of the mountain, will travel from root to root quenching their thirst, thus assisting the trees to produce their foliage in spring, the flowers to bloom and the grass to grow.

The building of the temple was first commenced five years ago, and has been worked on ever since, and it is expected that it will take fully five years to complete the building. The building will be fifty feet in height, and the excavation at the east end for the basement is about forty-six feet in depth. Mr. Folsom is the architect, and, as to his skill and ability as an architecturalist, the Manti Temple will speak for years after he has passed from the face of the earth. It was President Young's intention when he ordered the erection of the temple that it should be the grandest and most imposing structure on the American continent, and all indications point to such being the case.

Disease in Cigars.

If Trask, the great anti-tobacco apostle, were alive now, he would find a splendid text in the announcement of the prevalence of small-pox in the tenement houses where the majority of cheap cigars are manufactured. Vile as these imitations of cigars are they are made doubly repulsive by the knowledge of the fact that they pass through the hands and mouths of people afflicted with the most dangerous of all contagious diseases.

If the people who make the "three-centers" (or scencers) that are so extensively sold were to see the filthy dens in which they are manufactured, it is probable that the business of many of the cheap cigar dealers would be closed. Not only are these cigars rolled in dirty and, perhaps diseased hands, but the tips are fastened with dirty paste and rolled in mouths reeking with garlic and other vile abominations. Now small-pox comes as an addition to the other delectable concomitants of the "fragrant weed." Better smoke a pipe neighbor.—N. Y. Truth.

Twenty-dollar Gold Pieces in His Shoes.

Arkansas Gazette.

An old colored man who had just sold his cotton limped along a Little Rock street and overtaking several colored women who had refused to marry him walking with several "buck niggers," the old man exclaimed:

"Suthin's been ur hurtin' my feet all day," and removing one of his shoes he took out a twenty-dollar gold piece. "Suthin' has been hurtin' dis foot, too," he continued, and removing the other shoe took out another twenty-dollar gold piece.—"Dis beats any town I ebber seed. A man can't walk roun' without gettin' his shoes full ob gold. Hit reminds me ob de New Jerusalem."

Italy has formally protested against the action of France in reference to Tunis, and France is seriously considering the project of withdrawing from Tunis.

Supplies for the Indians are through the fault of the contractors, frozen up in rivers of the Northwest and will not reach their destination before spring. There will be suffering in consequence. Agencies are making loud calls for vaccine matter.
